

Isolated to Scattered Thunderstorms Saturday through Tuesday National Weather Service - Tucson, AZ

Issued: 12:45 pm, June 25, 2020

Next Update: As needed, based on any significant change to the forecast.

KEY POINTS

- Isolated to scattered thunderstorms are expected Saturday through Tuesday, mainly during the afternoon and evening hours and mostly from Tucson eastward. The main concern will be gusty and erratic outflow winds and lightning that could ignite new wildfires.
- Outside of thunderstorm areas, gusty afternoon winds will continue across all of southeast Arizona into next week.
- Slightly cooler temperatures this weekend into early next week.

CHANGES FROM PREVIOUS BRIEFING

- First Briefing.

CONFIDENCE AND DETAILS

Location 1 - Southeast Arizona -- From the Tucson Area Eastward

MEDIUM CONFIDENCE

Details:

Isolated to scattered thunderstorms possible mainly during the afternoon and evening hours Saturday through Tuesday. Main threats are gusty outflow winds in excess of 40 mph that could result in new wildfire starts. Brief downpours are possible with these storms but rain amounts will generally remain low. Best potential for thunderstorms will be in Santa Cruz, Cochise County and the White Mountains. The Tucson Metro area will be on the western edge of any thunderstorm threat.

FORECAST GRAPHICS

Isolated to Scattered Showers & Thunderstorms

Weather Forecast Office
Tucson, AZ

Saturday through Tuesday in the Afternoon & Evening

Issued Jun 25, 2020 11:13 AM MST

What

- Isolated to scattered to numerous thunderstorms during the afternoon and evening hours.

Where

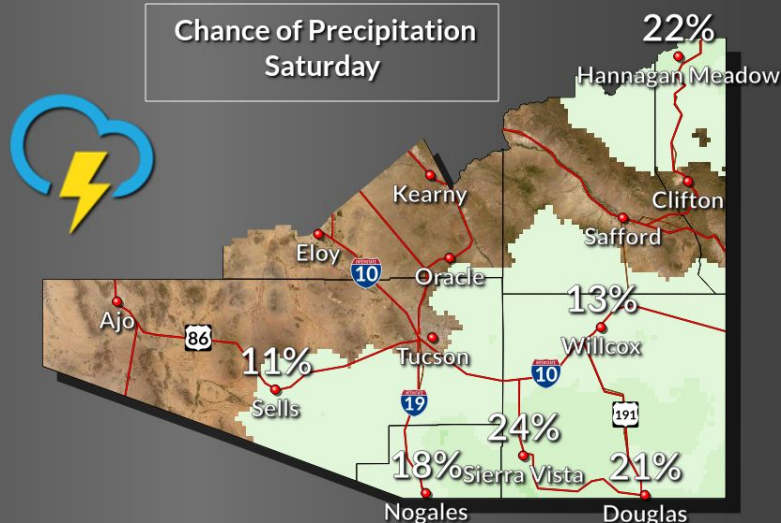

- Mainly from Tucson eastward.

When

- Mainly during the afternoon and evening Saturday through Tuesday.

Hazards

- Wind gusts in excess of 40 mph possible.
- Areas of blowing dust possible
- Brief downpours possible.

For the latest forecast updates, visit www.weather.gov/tucson

If you have questions or would like to submit weather reports, photos, or to unsubscribe from these briefings, email nws.tucson@noaa.gov.